

Continuing Bonds

Archaeology meets End of Life Care

This AHRC-funded study explores the use of the past as an innovative way of opening up conversations about death and dying in the present.

Archaeological and ethnographic case studies about the culture of death and the dead body will be presented to health care professionals and students in themed workshops in Bradford and Leicester. The aim is to evaluate how reflection on the archaeology of death may impact on professionals' level of comfort in what are often difficult conversations in end of life care.

Age and circumstances of death

Images of the dead

Memorialisation
and legacy

Ancestors

For updates and information on getting involved in our interactive workshops:

Web: www.bradford.ac.uk/continuingbonds

Email: ContinuingBonds@bradford.ac.uk

@CBondsStudy #ContinuingBonds

Project Team

Dr Karina Croucher: Principal Investigator Lecturer in Archaeology, University of Bradford

Laura Middleton-Green: Co-Investigator
Researcher, Faculty of Health Studies,
University of Bradford

Professor Christina Faull: Co-Investigator
Professor of Palliative Medicine, LOROS
Hospice, Leicester

Dr Lindsey Büster: Post-Doctoral Researcher
School of Archaeological Sciences,
University of Bradford